for a cruise around the world, in a seamy storm at sea, is one of the most remarkable scenic and electrical effects ever devised, and like life in the extreme.

The entire production is far beyond the usual run of traveling shows, and the company is said to be particularly strong, and is headed by Robert Ober, assisted by Carl Gerard, George Cross, George, Robert L. Crosby, Franklin Harcourt, John Alden, Gene Foxcroft, Nat Royster, Daniel Fager, Gus Christie, Norman MacDonald, June Mathis, Charlotte Lambert, Katherine Raye, Marie Horton, Elizabeth Van Sell and Viola Grant.

The play will be seen here at the Salt Lake theatre on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, with Wednesday matinee.

Vaudeville at Orpheum.

This week's Orpheum bill promises to be a winner. There is singing, dancing, drama, magic and novelty. Such acts as "The Little Blonde Lady," by Miss Hope Booth and company, "Valko," the magician, the clown, Bert and the monologist, Amy Stanley, Leo Earle, monologist; Alexis and Schall, acrobats and dancers, are on the bill.

Miss Hope Booth and her company are the headliners. They present George M. Cohan's "The Little Blonde Lady." This is a clever one-act sketch written in Mr. Cohan's most humorous manner. It deals with an American problem of critics and authors. The plot of this pretty sketch deals with a "man" who is a very much known man, and then he makes known his real identity, and, of course, proper and complimentary criticisms are promised for the future. The sketch is full of bright lines, and is presented in a most artistic and finished manner by Miss Booth, Charles Deland and Frank Dickson.

A magician who comes fresh from European triumphs is Valadon. He is a magician of originality and unique methods, who for years was associated with Kellar. Of late years Valadon has been the reigning king of mystery in Europe. In the "Egyptian Hall," London's most famous house of mystery and illusion. His newest conception is called "The Mysterious Cross."

A musical oddity entitled "Going It Blind" will be the offering of the Kinsmans, who are gifted and remarkable musicians. They have been seen here before, and their work is of the high order. One of the team plays the cornet in a delightful manner, while the other one is something of a freak musician in that he imitates the sound of the aid of any instrument or any musical device, the music of a number of instruments, such as the mandolin, violin, harp, cornet, concertina, drum, etc. His skill in this direction is simply wonderful. The Kinsmans who are commanded to play for the king of England must have merit. Burt Earle has done that very thing. He is an artist on the hard and produces classical music. He has just returned from an extensive tour through Europe.

Miss Amy Stanley comes here with four comical, amusing little peckaninies, who dance like the wind and who sing in vigorous fashion. Miss Stanley herself is an English soubrette whose name is a familiar word in the music halls of Europe. She is a singer of ability and a graceful and agile dancer. New stories, gags and witty sayings will go to make up the sum and substance of Leo Donnelly's act in what he terms "His Experiences." He comes with a wealth of brand new stuff which is said to gild-edge, and when told in his inimitable manner should be a real treat.

Then there is Alexis and Schall, who are also a foreign team, called "The Happy Pair." Theirs is an act wherein is blended and combined contortion, cork, singing and dancing. This number comes with a high recommendation from the London music halls. Alexis is a contortionist and athlete, and Miss Schall is a pretty, dainty dancer.

The program will, of course, contain two entertaining melodrama pictures, and the Orpheum orchestra will fill its usual numbers.

"A Gold Mine."

The next attraction at the Colonial theatre, beginning tonight, will be Nat Goodwin's big success, "A Gold Mine." The story deals with an Silas Woolcott of Grass valley, California, who goes to London to sell a gold mine. He is introduced into London society and immediately falls in love with a young widow, sister of the financier to whom he expects to sell his mine. He is holding the mine for a satisfactory sum, but he learns that the brother of this girl has forged his father's name, and in order to save the boy he sells his mine for half what it is worth.

This leaves him absolutely broke, and when the fashionable society learns that he is broke, he is cut dead on an invitation to dinner.

The complications arising from now on are funny. He is 3,000 miles from home on the 4th of July, and "broke." Every American who has been in similar circumstances can appreciate his feelings.

The young widow finds out what Woolcott has done for her brother, and buys the mine back, unknown to Woolcott and her brother, she falls in love with Woolcott, of course, and everything is satisfactory in the end.

Mr. Mack will be seen as Silas Woolcott, Miss Leone as Mrs. Meredith, the young widow, Marshall Farnum, Henry Hicks, Gus Arthur, Jay Quigley, Maude Cleveland, Agnes Bihal and the rest of the company are particularly well cast.

"The Flaming Arrow."

The romantic melodrama, "The Flaming Arrow," will be presented at the new Lyceum tonight. The play is from the pen of Lincoln J. Carter, who is a master in the construction of melodramas and novel effects. In addition to a company which is large and strong, he has secured many novelties with which to add realism to the situation of the play. Among the features are Moon Dog, a famous warrior; Red Flash, Custer's famous Indian scout, and the man who carried Custer's last message. American plays by American authors should ever be interesting events in a community where Americanism is a dominant characteristic.

In presenting "The Flaming Arrow" by Mr. Carter, the American author, theatre-goers will have a chance to see an art creation worthy of the sort. The characters are fifty. White Eagle, the young Arapahoe, is a good type of civilized Indian. His father, Black Eagle, represents that section of the brave and fearless but not less beloved Indian, whose astuteness and faithfulness was recognized and rewarded by the United States government. Colonel Fremont represents a fine old type of active and war-scarred soldier. His daughter, Mary, a womanly maiden, whose bravery and love for truthfulness are characteristic of American women. Such are a few of the prominent characters the author has happily chosen as representatives, together with a rascally Mexican, a treacherous lieutenant, a fun-loving negro and a witty Irishman. A tribe of sixteen Indians from their wild and picturesque homes, in native costumes and war head dress, add genuineness and attractiveness to one of the prettiest word paintings the stage has ever seen.

The piece gained a reputation during the run of it in Chicago that has seldom been accorded any organization playing the popular-priced houses.

"The Devil."

"The Devil," a new play by Franz Molnar, will be the attraction at the Grand, starting tonight. The material of the play, to be sure, is old as old as man, older than man's writings, and infinitely older than man's writings, and infinitely older than man's oldest play-acting—and it has been used in one form or another time without number. But this new playwright has cast it in a new form; he has retold it in new manner, the most ancient of all stories; he has, in short, defied tradition and modernized the devil. The author has made a devil one can understand. He is polite, urbane; he has traveled; he is brilliant in speech, obliging, conciliatory, agreeable; he is attractive, insinuating, ingratiating, fascinating. He alludes lightly to his coal bill while he nonchalantly flecks a speck of dust from his immaculate evening attire—or perhaps, a cinder.

"The Devil" will be presented by the Willis A. Hall company, which has presented this piece in the larger cities with a great success.

"Just Out of College."

George Ade's sparkling comedy, "Just Out of College," will be presented at the Salt Lake theatre on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of next week. The play has plot of the good old-fashioned kind that has become almost a lost art. In "Just Out of College" there is the same Ade gallery of typical characters, and the dialogue is rich in allusions to American conditions that must amuse every one who thinks about them. The story tells of a rich pickle manufacturer absorbed in business and allowing his woman's rights wife to have her own life and attend to his daughter, Caroline. She has picked up an impetuous professor of "repose" as a suitable husband for Caroline, but the girl has fallen in love with Edward Worthington Swinger, a clean-cut, bright young chap, just out of college, and he is introduced to the old gentleman. At first Pickering, the pickle man, can't see the young man at all, but he changes his mind after he has had a session with the professor, and finding that the college boy is penniless, stakes him to $20,000 to start in business. The young fellow starts a rival pickle factory and, making a big plunge by circus methods, succeeds in selling his newly-formed business to the pickle trust, of which Pickering is the head. Of course, when he makes his fortune, he wins the girl, and all ends happily.

There are many side issues, such as the advent of Aunt Julia from Duluth, who is supposed to be dead, and whose appearance on the scene at a critical moment is the signal for a burst of hearty laughter.

"The Right of Way."

In the first act of "The Right of Way," which Kins & Erlanger will shortly present in this city, Guy Standing and Theodore Roberts being especially featured by the management, Guy Standing as Charley Steele presents a psychological study, which more completely displays his versatility than any work he has before done on the stage. The cynical, reckless and tarnished personality of Charley Steele is thrown into bold relief in a series of encounters with the judges whom he flouts, the wife whom he has wronged, the murderer whom he has saved, the lover whom he defies and the drunken person and boyish reprobate whom he has led to ruin. These incidents of the story of the first act are shown in swift sequence and are very effective. His work in this act is in sharp contrast to his work in the following three acts, in which the regeneration of Steele is shown.

Theodore Roberts as Joe Portraits, the Canadian riverman, presents a character which is so complete in its contrast that, notwithstanding its strength, it does not in any way detract from the splendid work of Mr. Standing; even though it is generally accepted as a fact that a strong character part of the type of which Mr. Roberts plays will overshadow all others in the cast. In this production, however, Mr. Roberts plays a role which is co-important with that played by Mr. Standing, and fully as conspicuous in the development of the story. The supporting company has been highly praised wherever it has been seen, and the organization is generally regarded as quite the most important now on tour.

Camaphone at Lyric.

The camaphone at the New Lyric the current week presents Miss Alice Lloyd, England's daintiest comedienne, in three of her latest songs, "Over the Hills and Far Away," "Who Are You Getting At, Eh?" and "Splash Me." Miss Lloyd will be the headliner all week, and supporting her is found a coterie of entertainers who bring high prices for the work on the vaudeville stages of the east. Bud Ross sings some of the successes from Lonesome Town, and the Emerson quartette appears with a bunch of new songs. The records in these instances are especially good. Collins and Harlin present a very clever sketch.

Adding a historical touch to the program, a reproduction of the famous plea for Irish liberty delivered by Robert Emmett has been procured. The silent pictures, too, are better than usual this week.
